Catherine Cat runs the ferris wheel at the FABULAND® Amusement Park.

She makes sure no one has an accident and falls off. "Safety first!" she says.

Mike Monkey is Cathy's helper. He is also the handyman. Mike fixes the seats so they lock on tight.

Mike works very hard.

Freddy Fox is the businessman. He runs the slide ride and sells all the tickets.

Freddy makes sure everybody pays - no one rides for free!

Ricky Raccoon wants to run the merry-go-round - so he can sneak a ride for free. Ricky doesn't want to work. He wants to play all day.

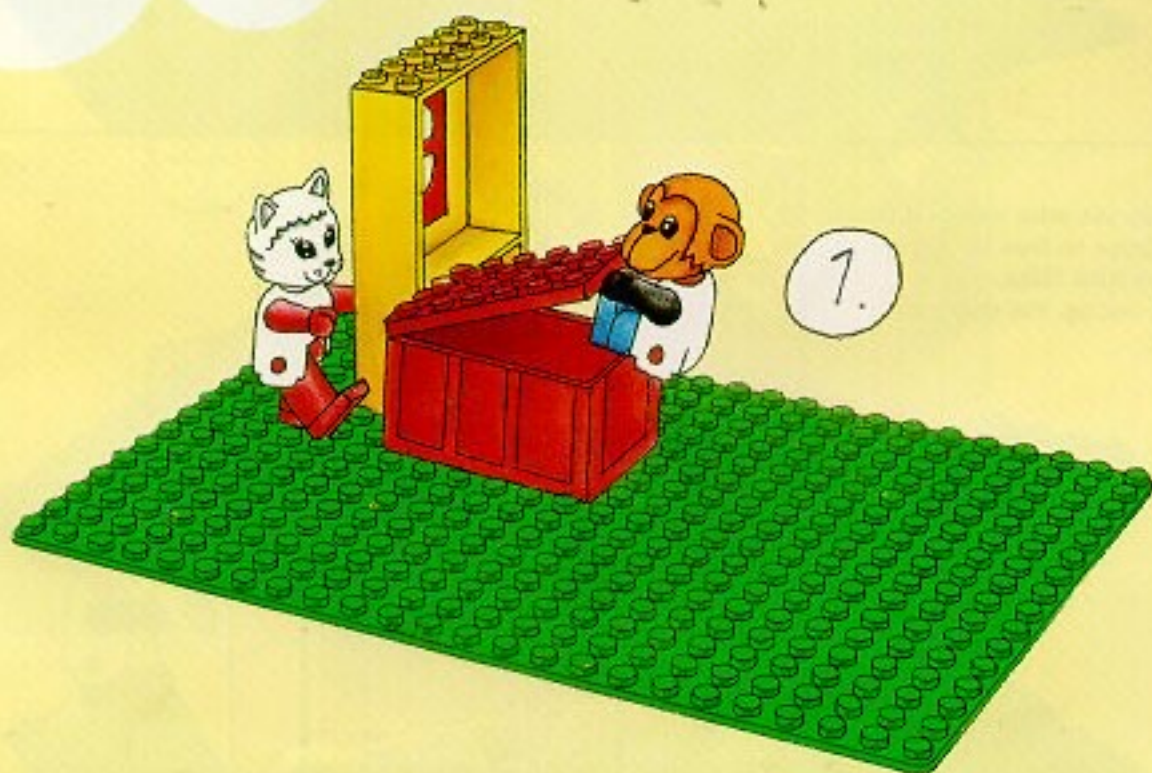

"Where do you go when the work is done?" Catherine Cat asked Mike Monkey.

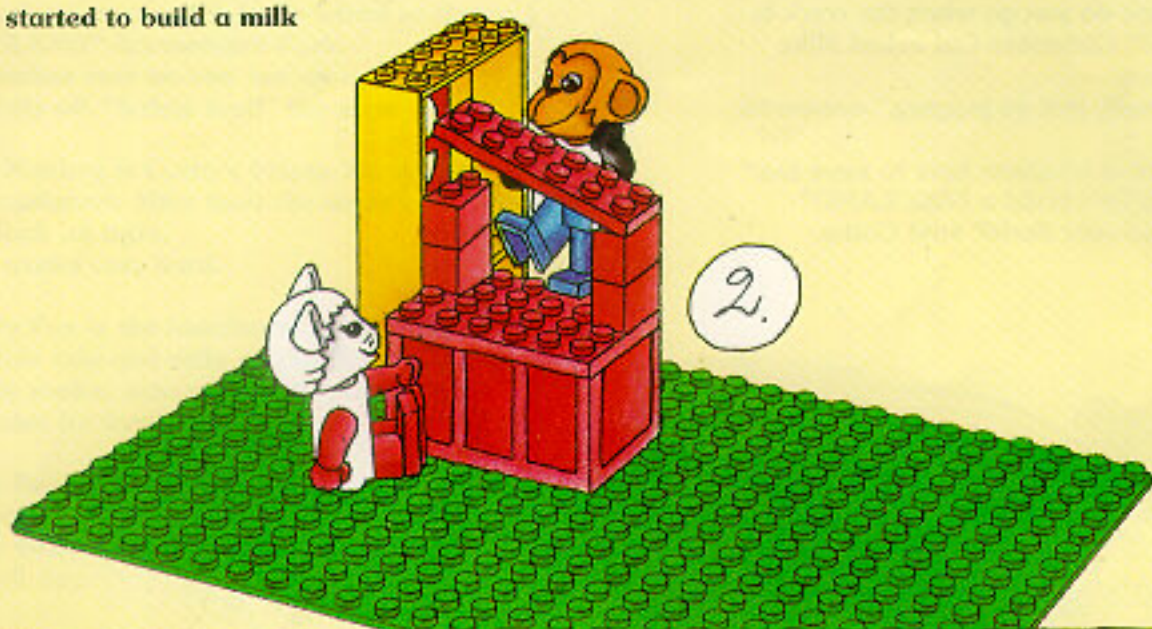

"I usually just go jogging," answered Mike.

"There is nowhere here to have fun."

"Then let's build a FABULAND[®] Amusement Park!" said Cathy.

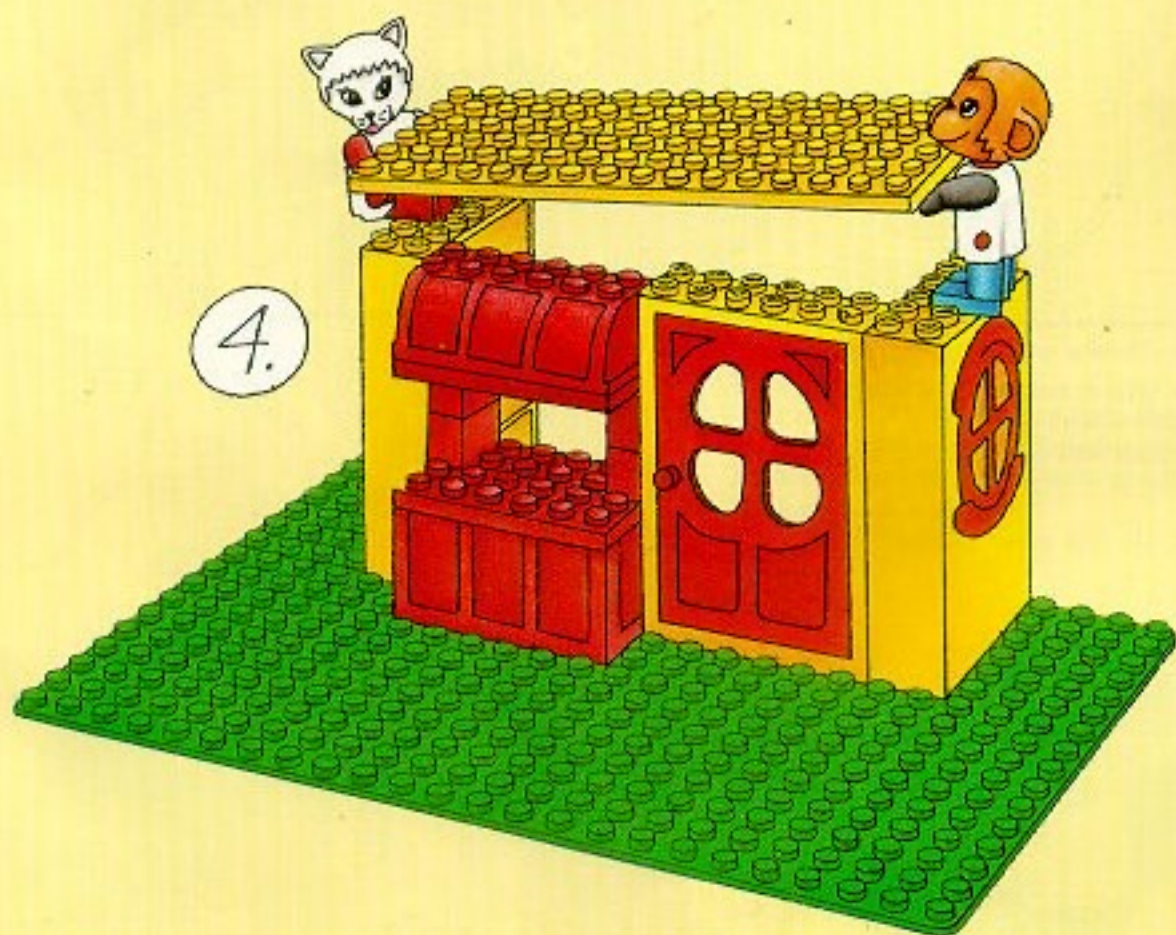

They started to build a milk bar.

"Everyone who wants a drink will have to line up here," Cathy told Mike. They set up the entrance door.

"Make sure the bricks fit good and tight."
Cathy said to Mike.
They put on the roof plate very carefully.

Next came the the big strong base for the ferris wheel.

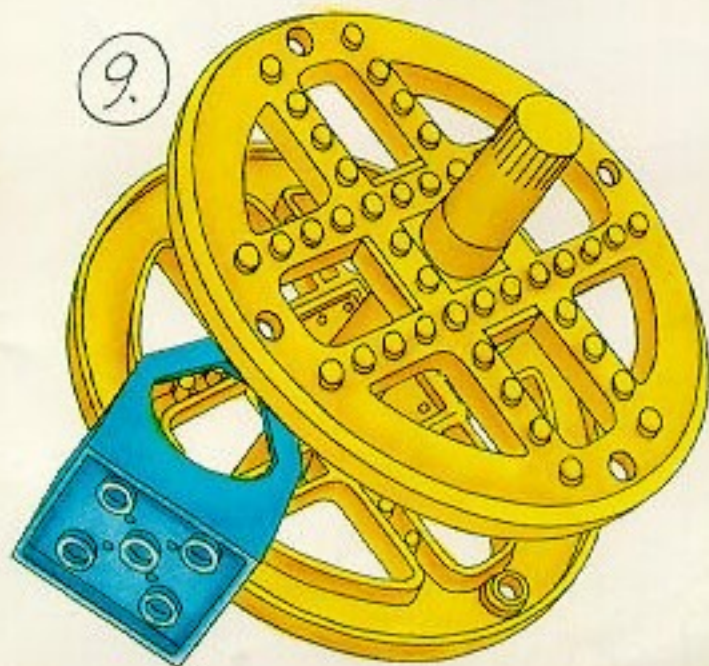

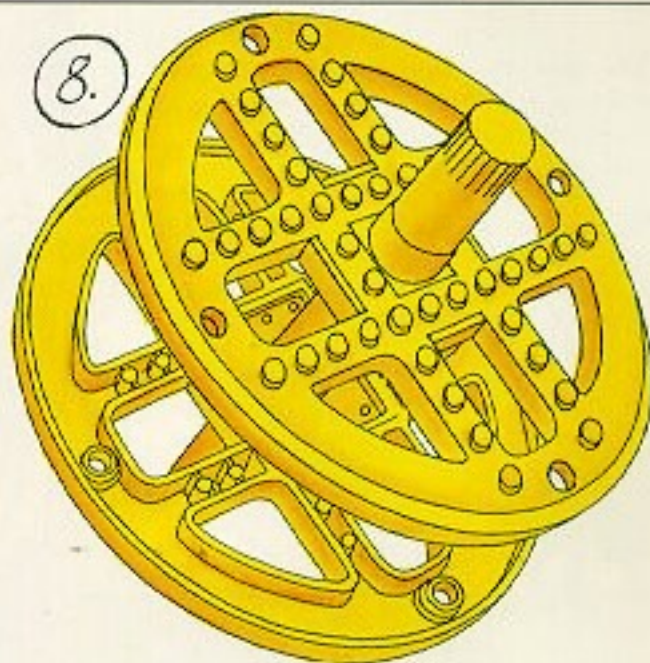

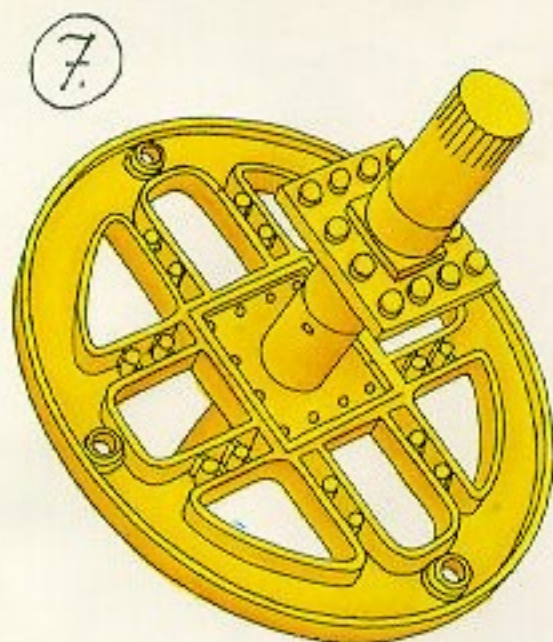

"This is going to be big," said Mike.

"That's why it needs these supports," explained Cathy.

"The wheel will sit safely right here."

"Now we're ready for the wheel", said Mike excitedly.

"Let me do it!" He put an axle through one side of the wheel. Then he snapped on the other half so the axle stuck out a little on both sides.

Last, he locked the seats into the ferris wheel.

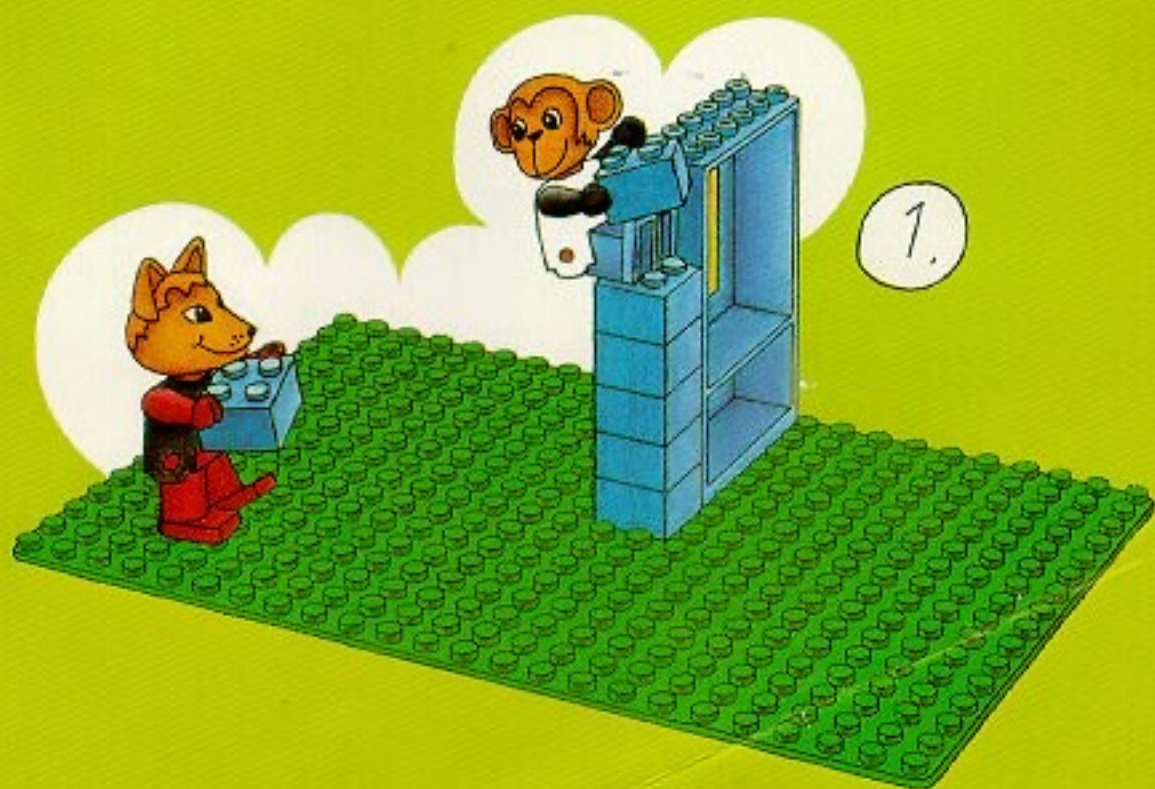

Cathy and Mike needed help to lift the big ferris wheel into place. It was lucky that Freddy Fox and Ricky Raccoon came by just at that moment.

"An amusement park! Oh, boy! I could make a fortune!" grinned Freddy.
"You mean you want to charge money to ride the ferris wheel?" Mike was shocked.

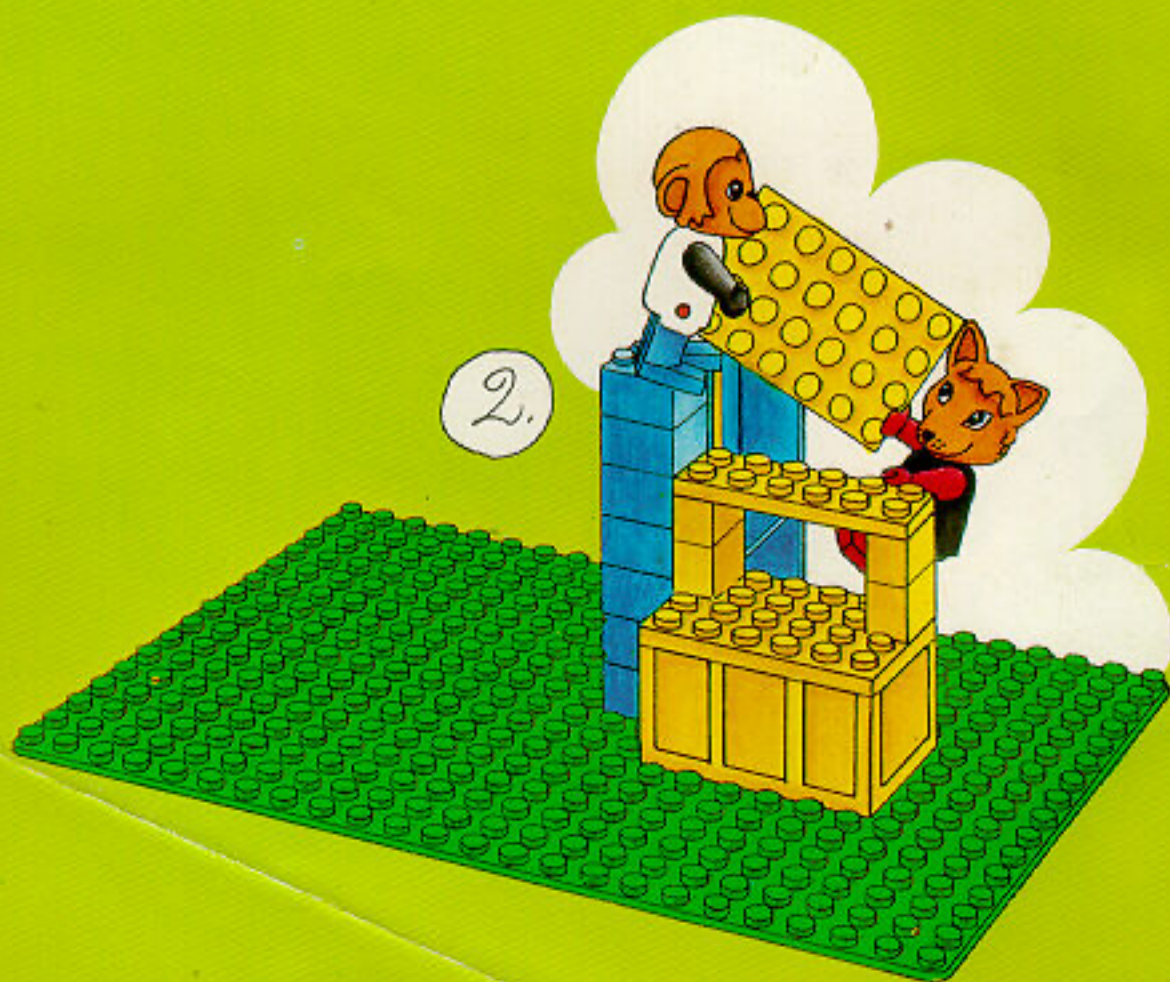

"And the slide. And the merry-go-round," said Freddy greedily.
"Here's a brick. Put the ticket booth there."

Mike found himself doing just what Freddy told him to do. He began building a ticket booth.

"Terrific!" said Freddy happily as Mike snapped a plate into place.
"We'll put an awning there to keep the sun out of my eyes."

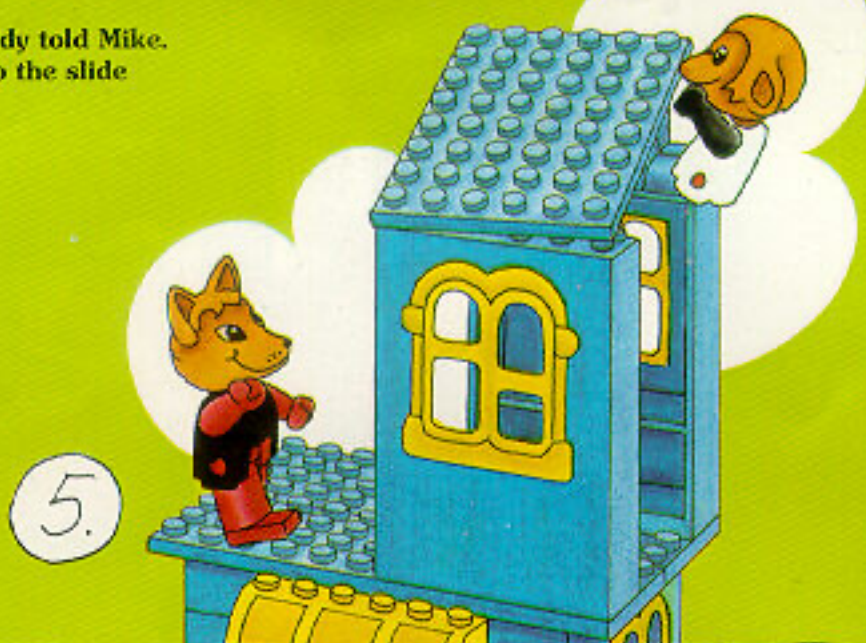

Next came the walls and windows.

Then the roof where the slide ride would start.
Freddy kindly gave Mike a hand with a heavy plate.

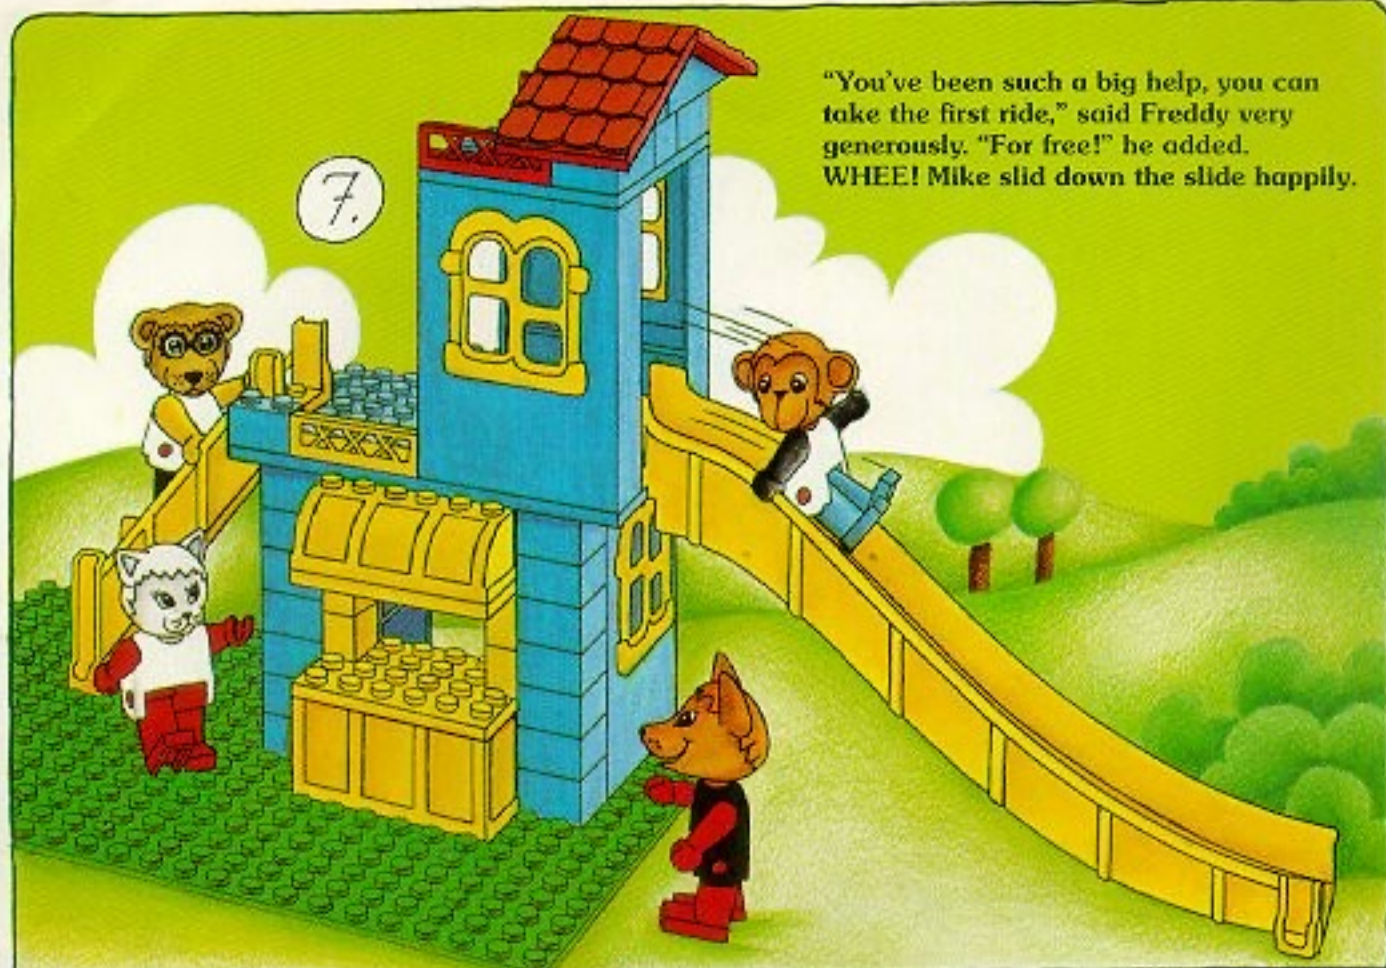

"The tower goes here," Freddy told Mike.
"So you can walk through to the slide ride."

"I need a hand with the roof, Fred."
Mike was tired.

"You've been such a big help, you can take the first ride," said Freddy very generously. "For free!" he added. WHEE! Mike slid down the slide happily.

"I can't wait to ride on this," said Ricky, when the merry-go-round and picnic area were finished.

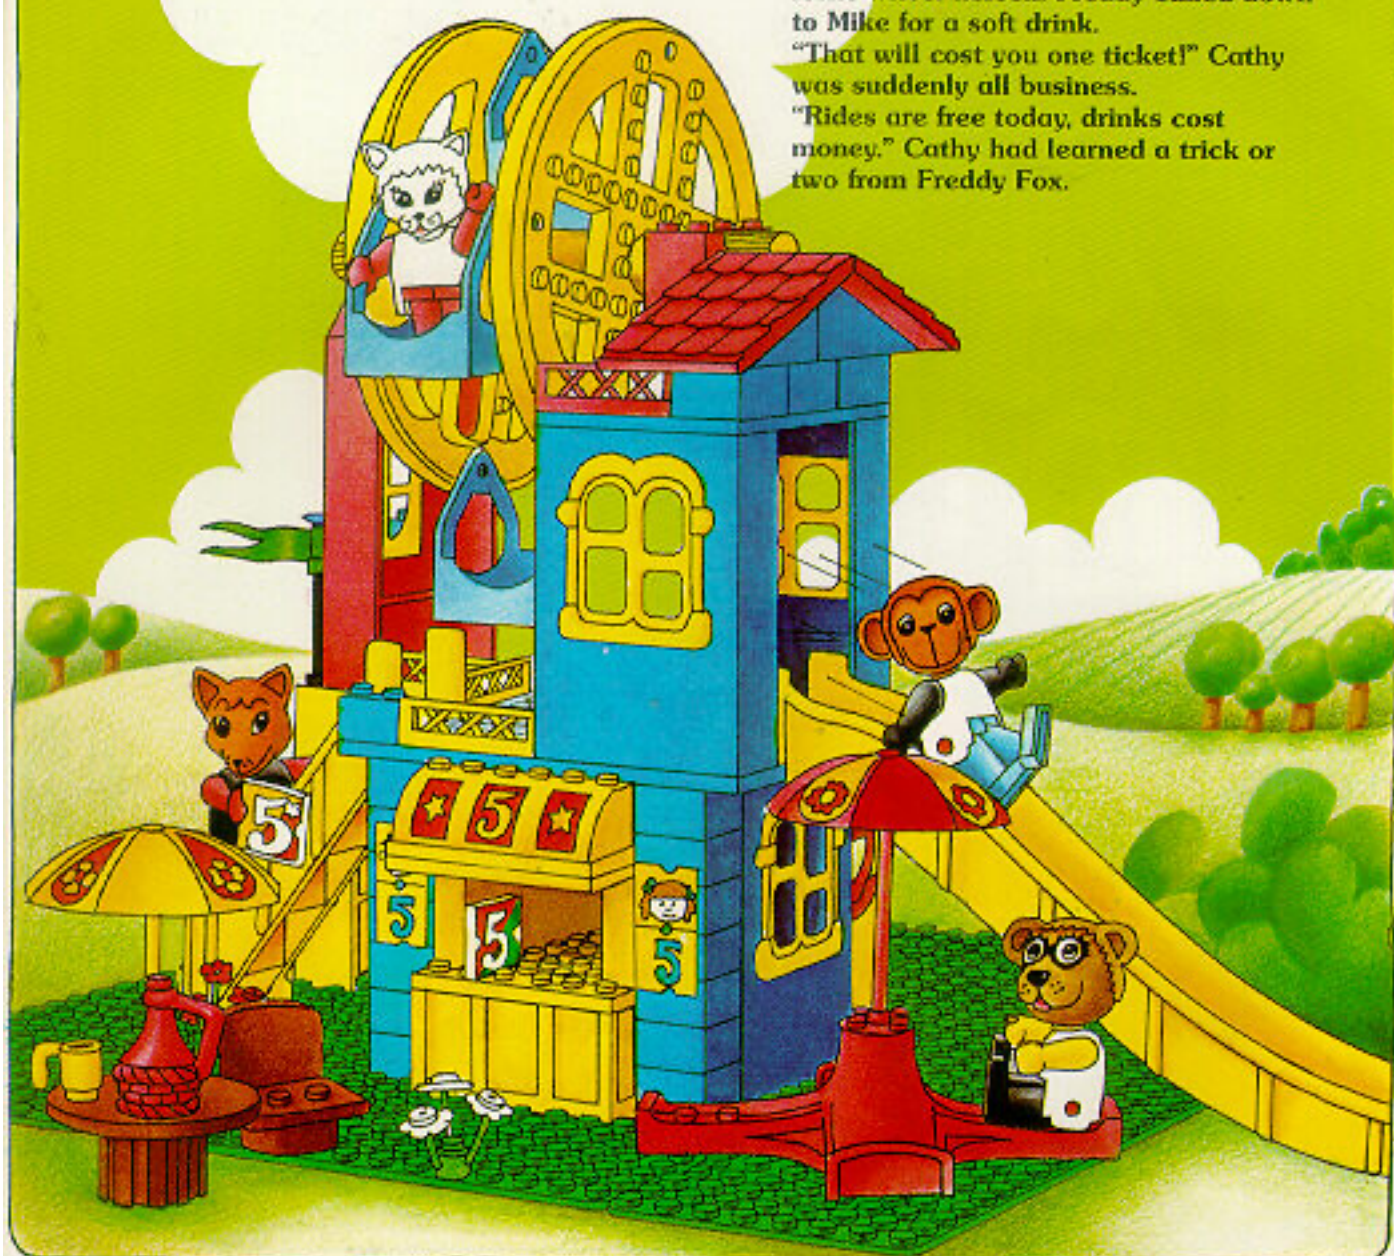

"You have to buy a ticket," said Freddy.
"You, too, Mike!" he called up. "No more free rides."
"I think the first day, all rides should be free," decided Cathy.

Besides, Cathy wanted to try out the ferris wheel herself. Freddy called down to Mike for a soft drink.

"That will cost you one ticket!" Cathy was suddenly all business.

"Rides are free today, drinks cost money." Cathy had learned a trick or two from Freddy Fox.

In the excitement of building an amusement park, they had all made one mistake. The park was too far out of town. So they built a lookout to find a new location.

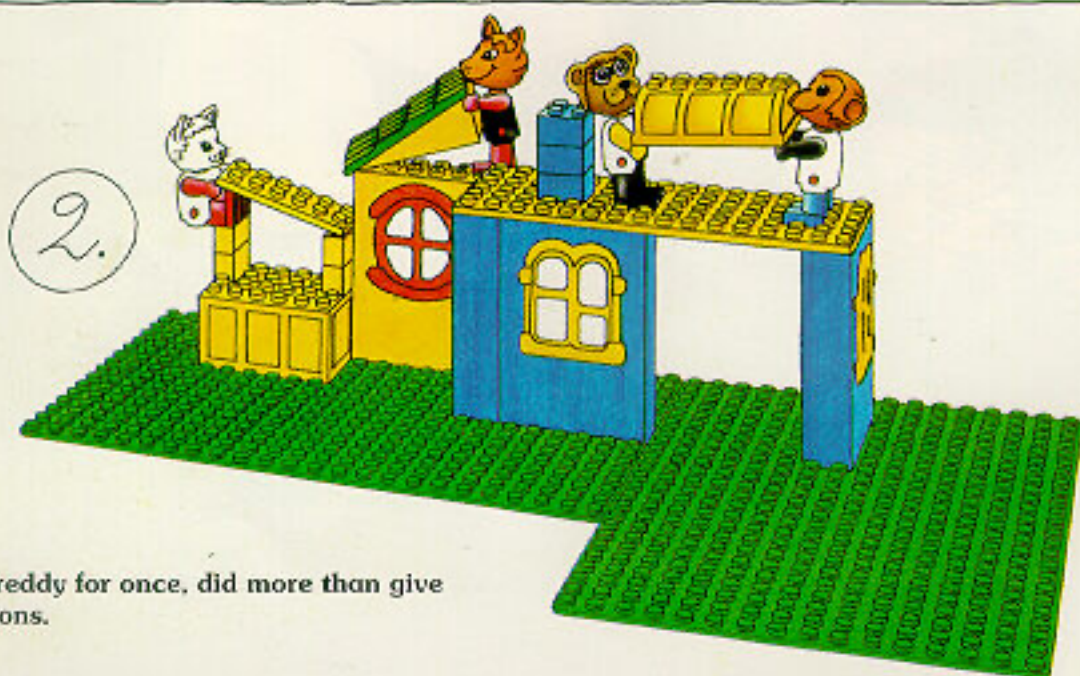

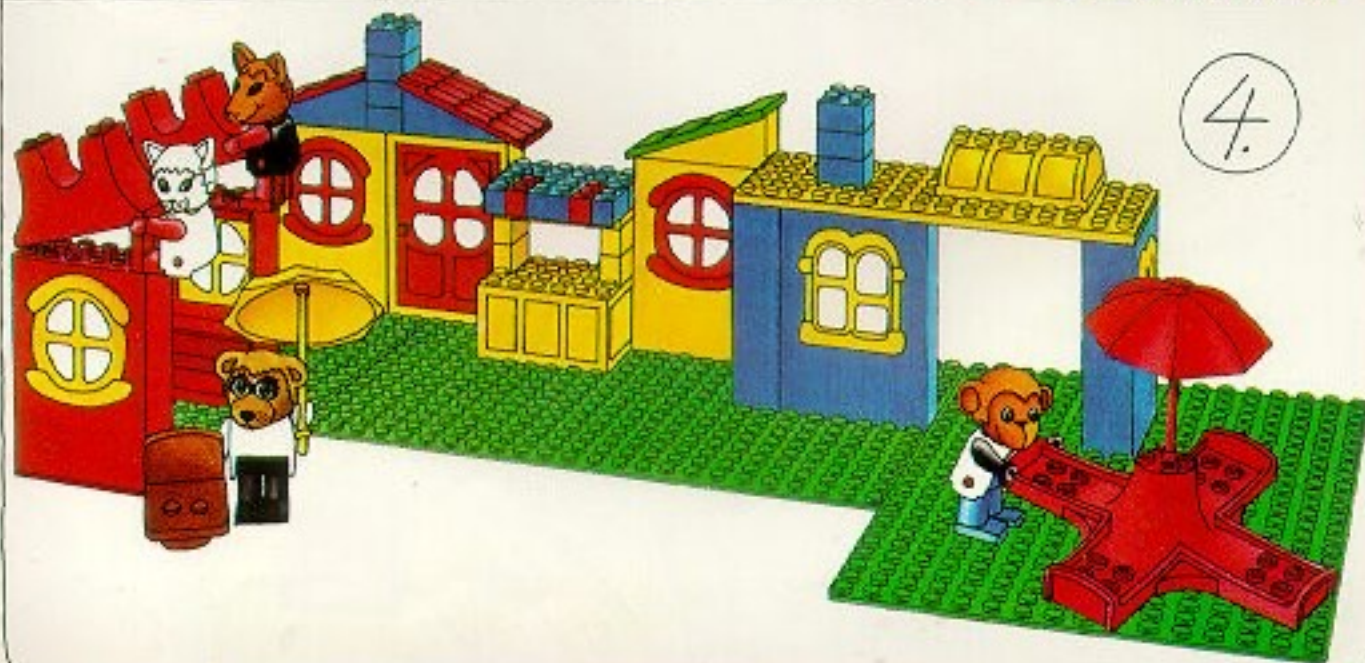

Then they packed up all the pieces into a very amusing plane - with umbrellas for propellers and ferris wheel seats for the passengers. Cathy sat at the controls. "Fasten your seat belts. We're going to land!" she called out.

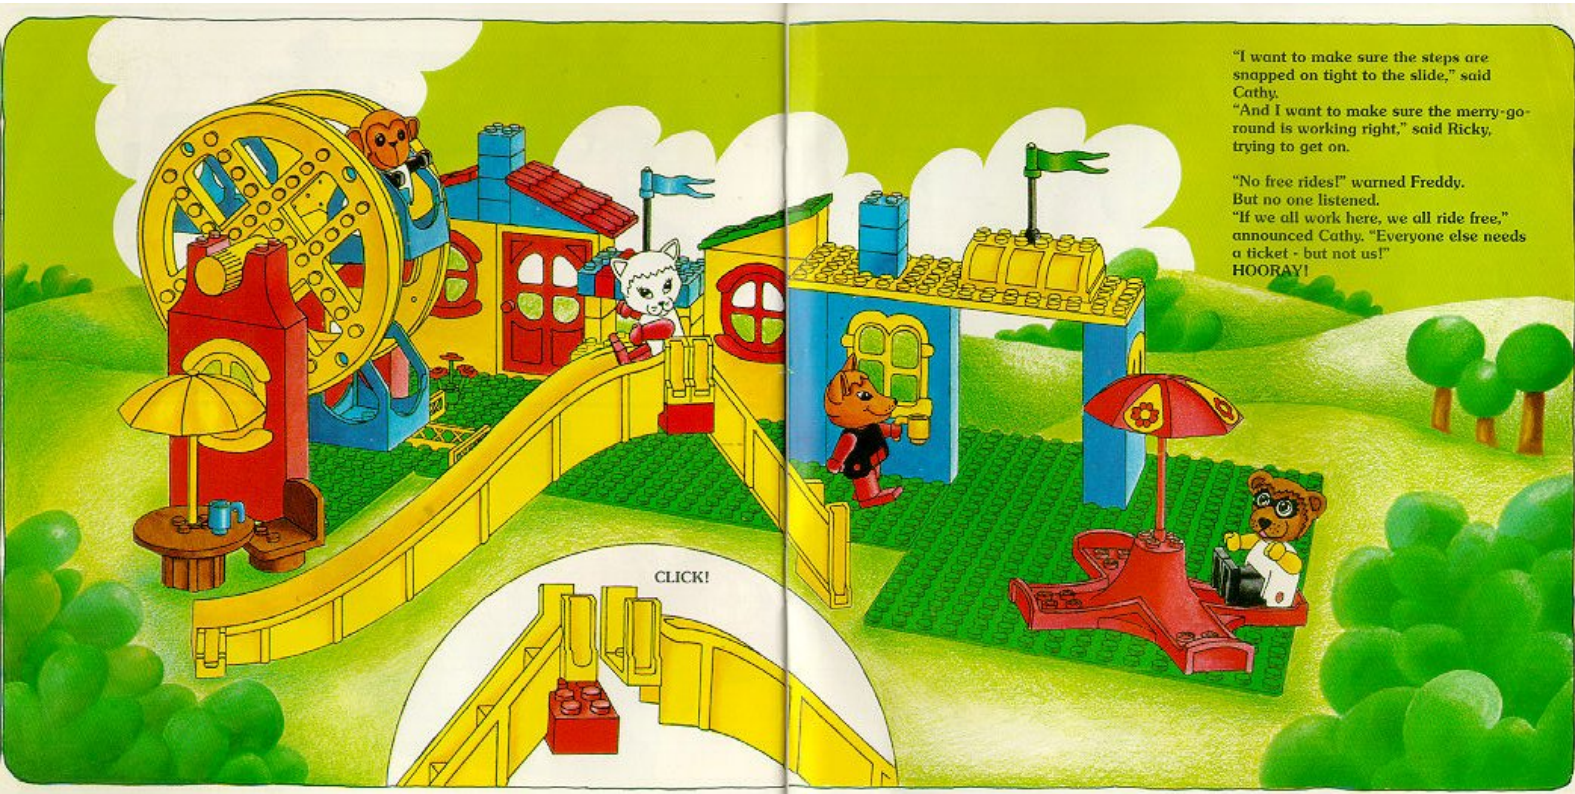

Then they started all over again, building a new amusement park. Even Ricky helped.

And Freddy for once, did more than give directions.

"I want to make sure the steps are snapped on tight to the slide," said Cathy.
"And I want to make sure the merry-go-round is working right," said Ricky, trying to get on.

"No free rides!" warned Freddy.
But no one listened.
"If we all work here, we all ride free," announced Cathy. "Everyone else needs a ticket - but not us!"
